Family trees are living documents. They change as new information is unearthed, confirmed, and are disputed. The various Hanna-Heastie-Tynes family trees are ongoing projects: they are a part of a genealogical research project that has been officially recorded and published since 2006.

This HHT genealogy listing is a continuation of a family tree project compiled by Dr. Harlington L. Hanna Jr., in tribute to the late Garvin Tynes for his dedication and work in establishing the first published genealogical works on the Hanna, Heastie, and Tynes families.

Like with every genealogical work, there are several variations of HHT family trees due to disputes over discrepancy in spelling/recording, the uncertainty over identity, and the lack of clear, documented support. The Hanna, Heastie, Tynes family trees include data from various oral history testimonies, registered birth and death records, numerous census reports and data from several online genealogical websites.

Even so, despite our efforts to record and document all HHT descendants, not every HHT family line is represented within this family genealogical project. There exist several unconnected pockets of families on various family islands and in the United States. These undocumented family pockets came as result of the early migration of many family progenitors, who traveled and started extended and secondary family lines throughout the Bahama Islands and the United States during the early 1900s.

To assist with the reconciliation of these family lines, ongoing research, inclusive of DNA testing, is encouraged and is being pursued to fill in gaps of missing data. Family members are encouraged to maintain their own immediate family trees and compare and share family data.

Family trees based on region is also encouraged. There exist independent family trees that trace the HHT descendants of San Salvador, Andros, Bimini, Grand Bahama, Key West and Miami, Florida.

The HHT family trees show the progenitors of the 3 family lines. The progenitors are listed as generation 1, with their children listed as generation 2, their grandchildren as generation 3, etc. There was also an attempt to have each family tree concentrate solely upon a specific family line. For instance, there are several HHT descendants whose lineage include all 3 families: Hanna, Heastie, and Tynes; however, if a specific family line is highlighted/recorded as the main family, those descendants are recorded in detail under that one specific family and only referenced on the other family trees.

Also note, that numerous HHT descendants are kin to several other prominent Acklins families, inclusive of the Benebys, Fergusons, Farquharsons, McFalls, Daxon etc. HHT descendants can gain insight into their family lines by comparing their HHT family tree lines to the various other Acklins families' family trees.
